

Ahmed Bharoocha

Ahmed Bharoocha was born into an Irish Catholic/Pakistani Muslim household. It was from here he gained his unique perspective and sense of humor towards life, and it was here, while making short films and putting on plays with his older sister, that he discovered his passion for performing. Ahmed and his sister eventually went on to film a short film in Pakistan that has gone on to be in many film festivals and won awards around the world. It was this film that earned him the award of 'best actor' in the Jordan Film Festival. Ahmed first took the stand-up stage while he was a dishwasher in a comedy club in Providence, RI. Since then he has given up washing dishes and performs everywhere from NY to LA to the UK. Ahmed is also in a two man sketch group, Uncle Mustache, and in one of Rhode Island's top improv groups, Unexpected Company. Ahmed is a favorite in the Boston Comedy Scene and has performed with national headliners such as Louis C.K. and Aziz Ansari. He was selected by Eddie Brill to perform in the 2009 Great American Comedy Festival. In 2009 he was also in the Boston Comedy Festival. In 2007 he was a winner of the Catch a New Rising Star competition.

Past College Dates:

- American International College
- Brown University
- Columbia University
- Emmanuel College
- Fairfield University
- Keene State College
- Massachusetts Institute of Technology
- Northeastern University
- University of Rhode Island
- Washington University - St. Louis